FACING THE FUTURE

The cotton crop in Laurens county this year may not exceed 15,000 bales, a tremendous drop from nearly 65,000 bales in 1920. It took even a worse crop than last year to convince us that the boll weevil would actually put in his effective work here. He has arrived with a vengeance. While prospects for farming under such conditions look gloomy, it is well to observe that farming under similar conditions in other states has not proven disastrous and that profitable crops can be grown. We believe that by their usual courage and application of common sense the farmers will overcome their difficulties and that by next year a turn for the better will begin.

RULE BY YELLOW RACE IS SEEN IN CENTURY

Editor and Student Sees Collapse of White and Christian Races.

Asbury Park, N. J., Oct. 18.—Within a hundred years the white and Christian races will have lost their predominating influence in world affairs, and within a century and a half the yellow and Mohammedan peoples will sweep over the face of the globe in an irresistible wave and become the dominant power. It is a veritable "rising tide of Islam" that William E. Aughinbaugh, editor of the New York Commercial, Bolivian representative in the Tacna-Arica land dispute, and globe trotter of a quarter of a century, foresees after years of intensive study and research in the religious and economic problems of the Orient, and which have brought him conviction that the so-called "yellow peril" is indeed a fact and not fancy.

Iron fleets and mailed fists of the Oriental nations of today or days to come do not figure in the portent which spells the ultimate effacing of the civilized world, in the view of Dr. Aughinbaugh. On the contrary, it is the rapid increase in population among the yellow races, particularly the Chinese, with their ability to gradually absorb those nations with which it comes in contact, and the even more rapid spread of the Mohammedan religion.

The latter, in Dr. Aughinbaugh's opinion, constitutes the greatest menace, if indeed, it is possible to place one on a plane of lesser import than the other. Not only has the Mohammedan religion, taken firm root among the Chinese, particularly those whose territorial limits abut on the domains of followers of the creed of Mohammed, but it is spreading south and north and west. While, at the present, its most fertile field is among the Celestial people, northern Africa, Afghanistan and India are being won over.

Dr. Aughinbaugh, as a member of the British cholera commission studying conditions in India and in official capacity in numerous other British and American expeditions to remote corners of the world, has been a close student of the kaleidoscopic changes of southern Europe as affecting Islam, and the slow turning of the religious pendulum in China.

What he found would take volumes to tell, but Dr. Aughinbaugh sums it up in this manner:

"The Mohammedan has at least four wives, the Christian only one. The potentialities of population which the yellow race now holds, therefore, is twice doubled as a result of the condition.

"Four or five thousand miles from the outposts of the Orient, the average American gives the alarming growth of Mohammedism in China only cursory thought. But when it is realized that, at the present birth rate, 100 years will see virtually the entirety of that country converted to the creed of Mohammed, with the end not in sight, there will be deeper thinking.

"What it means to the civilized world is a subject worthy of concentration. There is no use hedging the verity that, if the present pace continues, the white races will eventually be wiped out by the process of absorption, as the Chinese in time have absorbed every nation they came in direct contact with."

One factor, and only one, is deferring the growth of Mohammedism in China, Dr. Aughinbaugh continued, and that is the lack of knowledge of sanitary living conditions.

tions, the inability to cope with disease, the subsequent inroads by death into the teeming millions.

"I do not hesitate to say," he said, "that when the basic knowledge of medicines and clean living of the Western Hemisphere are inculcated in the Chinese people, it will only be a question of time before the entire world will be overrun by followers of the creed of Mohammed. As it is medicine slowly is making itself known among these through missionaries, and when once the great epidemics are mastered, as they will be, the birth rate will be a score times greater than the death rate.

"With the phenomenal increase in population, and the susceptibility of people living in tropical and semi-tropical lands to the doctrines of Mohammed, a century will witness the passing of the white race from its dominant position in the world's affairs, while a century and a half will see the globe overrun by the followers of the Arabian prophet."
